

Holy Light

Robert G. Brown

March 15, 2009

Copyright March 15, 2009 by Robert G. Brown

This document is made available under a modified Open Publication License.
It is freely available for non-commercial use and non-profit republication at:

<http://www.phy.duke.edu/rgb/poetry.php>

The specific terms of the license are in Appendix A of this document. The author may be contacted at:

Robert G. Brown
Duke University Physics Department
Durham, NC 27708-0305

email: rgb@phy.duke.edu
phone: 919-660-2567
web: <http://www.phy.duke.edu/rgb>

Contents

Introduction	2
Web Publication	2
About Me	3
About the Poetry	4
Short Poems	5
Manjusri and the Dragon	5
A Zen Question	5
Coward Koan	5
Fire	5
Relativism	6
Winter Prayer	6
Longer Poems	7
At Your Feet	7
The Lesson	9
Longer Poems	10
Sam Versus Sue Haiku	10
License Terms for “Holy Light”	12
General Terms	12
The “Beverage” Modification to the OPL	12
OPEN PUBLICATION LICENSE Draft v0.4, 8 June 1999	12

Introduction

Web Publication

This is the third of my books of poetry published on the web. The first, Who Shall Sing, Whan Man is Gone, was one of the first books of web poetry to be published back in the mid-90's when the web was young. The second, Hot Tea! has now grown from a handful of poems into a complete book. It is time to start a new one.

The poetry in these works is covered by a relatively new license, a modified form of the Open Publication License. Basically, this license permits nearly unlimited use of the work (including printing it out or reading it online or even binding copies for limited distribution at cost). It restricts modifications (obviously) and prohibits entirely republication for profitable sale without negotiating a license with me. Please read the license in detail before making any sort of media copy of the work (other than simply browsing or printing and reading it for yourself) and feel free to contact me directly if there are any questions.

I'm offering the poetry in online form for two reasons:

First, it in principle lets just about anybody in the known cyber-universe browse the poetry as often as they wish, absolutely free, or print it out to be able to read it when they aren't near a browser, or read it out loud. At the same time it preserves my right to make a profit from my own work (if anybody does) and prevents me from ever being in the silly position of having to purchase a book republication of my own work from which I've derived no gain. This may sound silly and impossible, but without careful licensing it is neither.

Second, I am one of a growing number of artists (software, prose, poetry, musical, visual) who rebel against the stranglehold of the publication and entertainment industry on individual artists. At a time we should be experiencing a cultural renaissance of truly universal proportions as the web extends a "voice" to every human on the planet little by little, we see that industry, with its immense profitability threatened, turn more and more to distortions of the laws intended to protect the artists to simply extend their reign of extortion.

There are some lovely websites that detail just how easy it is for a musical group (for example) to cut a deal for a CD, sell it successfully (hundreds of thousands of copies with millions of dollars in gross revenues) and actually lose money by the time the recording industry is through with them. It is perhaps not as bad in the paper publication industry, but we live in a world where the author, artists, or musician who makes as much as 10% of the net revenue generated from the resale of their own work is exceptionally fortunate.

So I say screw it. In a year, two years, or ten years the cyber-universe will include everybody on the planet and books like this will be commonplace, as will an entire counter-culture of music, poetry, prose, and visual arts. Some sites may have a button to click like this one: where anyone who wishes can contribute a small cash payment directly to the artist, along the lines of throwing a few coins in a hat or the electronic version of an open banjo case on a street corner. Others will be content just offer their work for the pleasure of it being read or otherwise enjoyed. Unlike the street, however, content on the web must be sought out. This work will never thrust itself upon you as you pass, unaware, on some street corner.

About Me

I am a theoretical physicist currently employed at Duke University in the Physics Department, where I teach various bits of physics esoterica to graduate and undergraduate students and conduct original research on a variety of topics. I am married to a rather beautiful physician (Susan F. Isbey, M.D.) who is an internist in private practice in Durham with a subspecialty of infectious disease (a way cool branch of medicine). We have three charming sons, aged sixteen, twelve and seven months as of this writing (they were only just born to nine when I first wrote this introduction many years ago). We also share our house with a cat named Luci(fer) who is very tolerant of boys and dogs. The dogs are represented currently by only Buttercup, a fat yellow lab with no hips, and Satchmo, a black border collie mix who is both sweet and slightly nuts.

In addition to a Ph.D. and B.S. degree in physics from Duke University, I completed the work for a B.A. in philosophy (Duke at the time didn't formally recognize a double major in humanities and sciences). I have completed at least masters level work in mathematics, and am a systems and network administrator and (Unix or DOS) systems engineer/computer consultant in my not particularly copious spare time.

So how did a perfectly ordinary computer/mathematics/physics nerd like myself manage to write three books of poetry? What do physics, math, poetry and philosophy have in common? More than you might think – see some of the musings on my philosophy pages. And anyway, nerds read books!

I have read approximately a book (full sized novel) a day for at least twenty of my forty one years of age, and gave up the book a day thing only when kids, my own writing, and a compulsion for doing New York Times crosswords intervened. I write extensively, both professionally (I have a long list of publications in Physical Review and elsewhere) and for fun. I have been writing poetry since the age of eight or nine, and many of the poems in this work date back to my college days. My favorite poets are W. B. Yeats (da man), A., Lord Tennyson, and T. S. Eliot in roughly that order, although I also enjoy Blake, Kipling, and many, many others.

So, I'm not just a technogeek. I am, at worst, a generalist-geek. In addition to the specific fields of physics, mathematics, general computing, philosophy and literature where I am professionally competent, I am a better-than-average fisherman, possess the skills required to build a house from the ground up (I worked construction for a while), operate an extensive kitchen/house garden, can do intermediate level auto servicing and repairs, and am a house-husband who does all the cooking and more than half the housework and child rearing in favor of my time-bound physician wife. The amazing thing isn't that I can write poetry; it is that I ever have time to write anything.

About the Poetry

Holy Light is just being begun, so there isn't (yet) a lot to say about it. I expect that many of the poems will have a Zen cast to them, a religious feel to them, as that is what currently inspires much of my thoughts, writings, and hence poetry these days. The first one, Manjusri and the Dragon, certainly does.

Manjusri is the version/avatar of the Buddha who is armed with a sword to fight against the "dragon" of desire, of greed, of a lust for things. Meditating upon Manjusri, one is supposed to visualize his sword cutting away your attachment to things. However, this vision of Manjusri as "other" is itself an illusion, a device to help those who are far from enlightenment to struggle with their personal "dragons". In reality, in this meditation Manjusri and the Dragon are both puppets that you make dance upon a stage of your own imagining...

Feel free to let me know what you think of these poems. You can send me email at rgb at phy dot duke dot edu, or send me paper mail at the address given in the Copyright notice at the beginning. If you like them, and find yourself returning to read them from time to time, feel free to drop a dollar in the metaphorical hat above, and I'll gladly tip my next glass to your health!

Short Poems

Manjusri and the Dragon

Manjusri fights the dragon, but He's just the dragon's tail puppet...

A Zen Question

Kill the Buddha!
Good Zen advice.
So then, should we Kill the Christ?

Coward Koan

End all suffering?
Die the final death?
The Buddha was a coward!

Fire

The center of self is like fire
Turns hours into ashes with flame
Its spark is the heart of desire
It gives to the shadows a name.

Relativism

Relativism is the form which says that in the face of storm the good in faith always conform to the norm.

They through life are blown along away from weakness to the strong as they discover from the throng
what is wrong.

In Rome, do as the Romans do!
If they can do it
why can't you?

Winter Prayer

It's three degrees
Too warm to freeze
My boys are begging
On their knees
That it will snow
And cold wind blow
And school let out
As white piles grow.

But all this rain!
It's such a pain
It will not snow
That much is plain.
So off to school
'Cause it's the rule
And Mother Nature
Has been cruel.

Longer Poems

At Your Feet

I miss my father's arms that held me
Miss my mother's arms around me
Miss the woman that I married
And the sound of her heartbeat.

I miss the baby that she bore me
But cannot hold to comfort crying;
Now here I lie in sorrow dying
In the middle of the street.

(Refrain)

I once stood tall, but now I'm falling
Shoulders bowed, in pain I'm falling
Falling to my knees, I'm falling
Falling, falling at your feet.

From my home my country called me
Sent me to this ancient Eden
Tore me from my humble heaven
In the hills of Tennessee

Then a nameless bullet found me
Tore right through my precious body
Snipped the thread that ever bound me
To a life that was so sweet.

(Refrain)

I once stood tall, but now I'm falling
Shoulders bowed, in pain I'm falling
Falling to my knees, I'm falling
Falling, falling at your feet.

A single tear for lost tomorrow
Ain't enough to hold my sorrow
And my torn body echos hollow
A miracle turned to meat

Now the light is slowly fading
Though the sun is brightly shining
And my memories finally ashes blown
To dust upon the street

(Refrain)

I once stood tall, but now I'm falling
Shoulders bowed, in pain I'm falling
Falling to my knees, I'm falling
Falling, falling at your feet.

The Lesson

What lesson does the baby born who dies in the light of its second morn learn from a punishment of false fruit reaped in the myth of the fall from perfection? Its ears hear not the anguish torn from those who dared to tempt the fates with love unearned bestowed on filmed eyes, stilled heart, tiny body of hope brought to abrupt ending.

Who can think mere burdened cross carries weight enough to pay the due on all the pain? Quick death, foreordained with loaded dice (in glib illusion of sacrifice) is no match for the suffering of cancer victim, eaten inside until they slowly suffocate
no match for the “witches” burned alive no match at all for billions of years of animals suffering a single fate
no match, no match for the rivers of tears.

No simple garden is this Earth.
No simple myth explains its birth.
No simple promise of hell or paradise supported by dozens of legends and lies makes up for the fact that all life dies more often in pain than not.

There is, in fact, only one way true justice could be schooled in the random dance of being.
If all things, all hearts, all pain, all joy,
are shared by One who is not aloof.
All evil, all good, both darkness and light,
all past, all future – under just One roof.
This only could make it all right.

Longer Poems

Sam Versus Sue Haiku

The following is an actual Haiku War between my thirteen year old son Sam and his mother Sue that occurred around the end of February, 2009. The story is that we were driving somewhere at night and one of us in the car – memories are confused as to just who – referred to police cars as being ‘sharks cruising the asphalt’. Why, it might have even been me (although both of them deny it)!

Wherever the line came from, Sam grabbed it (or came up with it, depends on who you ask) and turned it into ‘sharks cruising the asphalt sea’ (which did have a nice ring to it, whereupon his mother (who was popping out lines of her own around the same time) preferred asphalt jungle, and all at once a storm of I’m-one-up-on-you free verse haiku bounced around in the car, mixed with a certain amount of argument (in which I did not participate, it being beneath my dignity and besides I was mostly driving and trying to avoid the sharks).

Anyway, we came home and Sam was very quiet for a while we as we sat together in our den, then he grabbed a small pad of paper and scribbled and produced his version of the poem in Mike Myers I Married an Axe Murder style beat-poet haiku (as that was the rhythm they were both using, da-da, da da-da, da da da da da da da, da da da da da, complete with the attitude and an imaginary cup of espresso in hand).

Sam:

silent and stealthy
the sharks cruise the asphalt sea
in the dark they wait

His mother applauded his efforts, but then grabbed the pad and wrote her version:

Sue:

silent stealth in chrome
sharks cruise the asphalt jungle
silently they wait

This irked Sam, who grabbed the pad and promptly wrote on, triggering the following rather hilarious exchange:

Sam:

my mother the thief
remora on my body
she stole my poetry

Sue:

my son the ingrate
he sucks all my life juices
viper at my breast

Sam:

we fight, we fight hard but this jibe is pointless pain
I will win, you tramp

Sue:

you insolent pup
you have met armageddon
your mistress owns you

Susan's writing was deteriorating as she was giggling, almost in hysterics over Sam's replies as she wrote, and the word "pup" above looked (on the paper) more like "perp", the "you"s like "yon"s, and the word "owns" was all but illegible o-something-something-s. Sam tried to read it, couldn't, and had to ask for a translation. Truly miffed at this point, Sam replied:

Sam:

your handwriting sucks
I wish I could read it well your nurse must hate you at which point we all collapsed in laughter and the two of them finally quit. (My wife is a physician, in case I didn't mention that, and actually has very good handwriting for a doctor.)

There it ended (for at least that day), with Sam having the last word. And here I immortalize it. It is evidence of something that needs to be preserved. The literacy and surprising talent of youth? The strangeness of my family where we speak in rhyming couplets (or sometimes – as demonstrated above – in more complex verse forms) in everyday conversation? A bit of badinage exchanged by two people who deeply love one another and are willing to exchange crafty insults in free verse to prove it?

rgb:

my family's odd children duelling us both in cruel haiku

License Terms for “Holy Light”

General Terms

License is granted to copy or use this document according to the Open Public License (OPL, enclosed below), which is a Public License, developed by the GNU Foundation, which applies to “open” generic documents.

In addition there are three modifications to the OPL:

Distribution of substantively modified versions of this document is prohibited without the explicit permission of the copyright holder. (This is to prevent errors from being introduced which would reflect badly on the author’s professional abilities.)

For-profit distribution of the work or any derivative of the work in any form is prohibited unless prior permission is obtained from the copyright holder. (This is so that the author can make at least some money if this work is republished in any form and sold commercially for – somebody’s – profit. The author doesn’t care about copies photocopied or locally printed and distributed free or at cost to students to support a course, except as far as the next clause is concerned.)

The “Beverage” modification listed below applies to all other usage of this work in any form (online or in a paper publication). Note that this modification is probably not legally defensible and can be followed really pretty much according to the honor rule.

As to my personal preferences in beverages, red wine is great, beer is delightful, and Coca Cola or coffee or tea or even milk acceptable to those who for religious or personal reasons wish to avoid stressing my liver.

The “Beverage” Modification to the OPL

Any regular user of this OPL work (who, we will presume, gets some pleasure or enjoyment from its use) shall, upon meeting the primary author(s) of this OPL material for the first time under the appropriate circumstances, offer to buy him or her or them a beverage. This beverage may or may not be alcoholic, depending on the personal ethical and moral views of the offerer(s) and receiver(s). The beverage cost need not exceed one U.S. dollar (although it certainly may at the whim of the offerer:-) and may be accepted or declined with no further obligation on the part of the offerer. It is not necessary to repeat the offer after the first meeting, but it can’t hurt...

OPEN PUBLICATION LICENSE Draft v0.4, 8 June 1999

I. REQUIREMENTS ON BOTH UNMODIFIED AND MODIFIED VERSIONS

The Open Publication works may be reproduced and distributed in whole or in part, in any medium physical or electronic, provided that the terms of this license are adhered to, and that this license or an incorporation of it by reference (with any options elected by the author(s) and/or publisher) is displayed in the reproduction.

Proper form for an incorporation by reference is as follows:

Copyright (c) <year> by <author's name or designee>. This material may be distributed only subject to the terms and conditions set forth in the Open Publication License, vX.Y or later (the latest version is presently available at <http://www.opencontent.org/openpub/>).

The reference must be immediately followed with any options elected by the author(s) and/or publisher of the document (see section VI).

Commercial redistribution of Open Publication-licensed material is permitted.

Any publication in standard (paper) book form shall require the citation of the original publisher and author. The publisher and author's names shall appear on all outer surfaces of the book. On all outer surfaces of the book the original publisher's name shall be as large as the title of the work and cited as possessive with respect to the title.

II. COPYRIGHT

The copyright to each Open Publication is owned by its author(s) or designee.

III. SCOPE OF LICENSE

The following license terms apply to all Open Publication works, unless otherwise explicitly stated in the document.

Mere aggregation of Open Publication works or a portion of an Open Publication work with other works or programs on the same media shall not cause this license to apply to those other works. The aggregate work shall contain a notice specifying the inclusion of the Open Publication material and appropriate copyright notice.

SEVERABILITY. If any part of this license is found to be unenforceable in any jurisdiction, the remaining portions of the license remain in force.

NO WARRANTY. Open Publication works are licensed and provided "as is" without warranty of any kind, express or implied, including, but not limited to, the implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose or a warranty of non-infringement.

IV. REQUIREMENTS ON MODIFIED WORKS

All modified versions of documents covered by this license, including translations, anthologies, compilations and partial documents, must meet the following requirements:

1. The modified version must be labeled as such.
2. The person making the modifications must be identified and the modifications dated.
3. Acknowledgement of the original author and publisher if applicable must be retained according to normal academic citation practices.

4. The location of the original unmodified document must be identified.
5. The original author's (or authors') name(s) may not be used to assert or imply endorsement of the resulting document without the original author's (or authors') permission.

V. GOOD-PRACTICE RECOMMENDATIONS

In addition to the requirements of this license, it is requested from and strongly recommended of redistributors that:

1. If you are distributing Open Publication works on hardcopy or CD-ROM, you provide email notification to the authors of your intent to redistribute at least thirty days before your manuscript or media freeze, to give the authors time to provide updated documents. This notification should describe modifications, if any, made to the document.
2. All substantive modifications (including deletions) be either clearly marked up in the document or else described in an attachment to the document.

Finally, while it is not mandatory under this license, it is considered good form to offer a free copy of any hardcopy and CD-ROM expression of an Open Publication-licensed work to its author(s).

VI. LICENSE OPTIONS

The author(s) and/or publisher of an Open Publication-licensed document may elect certain options by appending language to the reference to or copy of the license. These options are considered part of the license instance and must be included with the license (or its incorporation by reference) in derived works.

A. To prohibit distribution of substantively modified versions without the explicit permission of the author(s). "Substantive modification" is defined as a change to the semantic content of the document, and excludes mere changes in format or typographical corrections.

To accomplish this, add the phrase 'Distribution of substantively modified versions of this document is prohibited without the explicit permission of the copyright holder.' to the license reference or copy.

B. To prohibit any publication of this work or derivative works in whole or in part in standard (paper) book form for commercial purposes is prohibited unless prior permission is obtained from the copyright holder.

To accomplish this, add the phrase 'Distribution of the work or derivative of the work in any standard (paper) book form is prohibited unless prior permission is obtained from the copyright holder.' to the license reference or copy.

OPEN PUBLICATION POLICY APPENDIX:

(This is not considered part of the license.)

Open Publication works are available in source format via the Open Publication home page at <http://works.opencontent.org/>.

Open Publication authors who want to include their own license on Open Publication works may do so, as long as their terms are not more restrictive than the Open Publication license.

If you have questions about the Open Publication License, please contact TBD, and/or the Open Publication Authors' List at opal@opencontent.org, via email.